In a campus setting, taking over a building for business can be time-consuming and expensive. College students need the ability to set up a business quickly and have a location to operate out of. The economic downturn has made some business owners find it difficult to find a location, rent one, and start a business. This report will explore these areas and provide help for someone trying to start a business. Steps Part I: Conventional and alternative methods of acquiring a campus location 1 Identify the location of your business. This can be the place that you have in mind, but it is also the place that makes the most sense to your business. Does it fit the needs of your business? Is it convenient? Is it close to your other sources of business? 2 Assess your budget. Calculate how much money you want to spend on renting this location, and how much you can pay. It is best to go into this with a budget. You may be surprised at how much you will need. 3 Obtain a lease. If your business is not a first-time business owner, you will need a lease. This will establish that you are actually moving into the location. 4 Pay your rent. You should pay your rent by the day, not by the week, or month. This helps keep the cost down. If you pay for an entire month or week, 82157476af
