AA308 THOUGHT AND EXPERIENCE: THEMES IN THE PHILOSOPHY OF MIND

Book 5 Consciousness

Keith Frankish

Consciousness seems to present the biggest challenge for a science of the mind. Can science explain the feel of conscious experience – what it is like to have a throbbing headache, or see a sunset, or smell freshly ground coffee? Are such experiences just complex physical phenomena or is there more to them than a physical account can ever capture? Can we explain consciousness in functional terms? Is the feel of a conscious experience a matter of what it represents? Is it the product of a form of inner awareness? Could it be that our view of consciousness is mistaken and that we need to rethink our assumptions about it? These questions go to the heart of our conception of ourselves and our place in the universe, and they are the subject of vigorous debate among contemporary philosophers.

AA308 has five course books:

Aspects of Mind Sean Crawford

Emotion Carolyn Price

Language and Thought Alex Barber

Imagination and Creativity Michael Beaney

Consciousness Keith Frankish
